An extract from an EditShare release: bksts.com/BKSTSNews/

Lightworks 11.2

At NAB 2013, EditShare will be previewing the new Mac OS X version of Lightworks. In addition to the Windows and Linux versions, this makes Lightworks the first NLE to be truly cross platform across all major operating systems. It continues to attract a growing user base with 450,000 registered Windows users, and the floodgates are about to open for the Linux and Mac OS X communities. As always, Lightworks is available to users – for free – forever. More and more professional editors are returning to Lightworks to edit major commercial feature films and projects. A training certification program for Lightworks will also be introduced later this year.

New features in Lightworks 11.2 include:

- Added support for AJA I/O hardware
- Added support for screen capture using the record panel
- An improved import panel; now behaves similarly to bins, mark/park clips before import
- Native H.264 MOV playback
- Added Curve effect to FX Colour Correction effects

I too would be interested in alpha testing. We're going to give the Llinux beta a whirl and see how that goes but finding a long term replacement to Premiere and Final Cut Legacy would be nice!

So... It's been 6 months since NAB.

I don't think it's too much to politely request an update from Lightworks about progress on the Mac version.

OSX Sea Lion, the new Mac Pro and possibly new MacBook Pros will be released within a couple of weeks, so now would be a great opportunity for Lightworks to let people know how the Mac version is coming along.

Yes, I would love to know when there may be a Mac release, I am runningnow through bootcamp.

Would love to help test if it is not too late!

Thanks!

I'd like to join in to the polite request. Can we know something about the Mac version? I am not asking this to get on anyone's nerves, I only ask because this IS important to me. We're almost halfway the last quarter of 2013 and nothing is known about it.

Thanks a lot.

Hello,

I'd also like to politely ask for news.

I have a class full of film students waiting to make their first steps in editing and I'd love to explore Lightworks with them.

But I'm really hesitant to go through Bootcamp on all our macs if there was an OSX version of Lightworks around the corner.

So ... is it possible to say if it would be more a matter of weeks or months before a Mac-native gets released because that would really help me in my choice.

Or maybe you could use a handfull of alpha-testers. We'd be happy either way.

Thanks from Germany for your outstanding work!

bootcamp is a few clicks away ,)

mac pro some more clicks credit card

so apple does no good job @ EDU ...

(disconnect thunderbird cage and it is gone away...)
